

Erectile Dysfunction (ED)

Erection problems are very common, especially in men over the age of 40. What treatment is available?

We are pleased to be able to offer courses of Emsella, which is a completely painless, non-surgical, non-invasive treatment.

Treatment for ED depends on the underlying cause.

If your blood pressure or cholesterol is high, you may be recommended treatment for this. If you have a hormone problem, you will be advised about replacement therapy. If your ED is caused as a side effect of a drug, then you may be advised to take an alternative. If your ED is thought to be due to an emotional problem, MUMS Consultant – Miss Hannah Church – can help you with this.

The treatment involves sitting on a specialised chair, fully clothed. A strong electromagnetic field is generated causing supramaximal contraction of the muscles. It also stimulates the body to create new muscle fibres and proteins.

If Miss Church suspects your ED is endocrine related or hormone related, she will liaise with our endocrinology and gynaecological consultants to advise on the best treatment. Medicines such as Viagra may be recommended. You may be recommended a vacuum pump if this is thought to be the most suitable treatment.

Men who suffer from ED will benefit from seeing a sexual health consultant, and with the right support and advice - can return to an enjoyable and pleasurable sex life.

Problems with sexual function, satisfaction and pleasure

Problems with sexual function, sexual pleasure and enjoyment are very common for both men and women.

It can be very challenging for many people to talk about but here at MUMS, you can discuss any of these problems and all treatment options with our Sexual Health Consultant, in a friendly, professional, non-judgmental, and confidential consultation.

In women this can include painful sex and lack of orgasm and libido matters.

In men, sexual problems can include an inability to achieve an/or maintain erection, delayed ejaculation or ejaculation that is too quick.
